Rally Portugal: Jan Kopecký leads WRC 2 Pro category at WRC debut of ŠKODA FABIA R5 evo

- › After the first leg, reigning WRC 2 Champions Jan Kopecký/Pavel Dresler top WRC 2 Pro category ahead of teammates Kalle Rovanperä/Jonne Halttunen, who suffered a puncture
- › Apart from that, both ŠKODA works crews so far had a trouble-free run during the FIA World Rally Championship debut of the ŠKODA FABIA R5 evo
- › On Friday the two ŠKODA FABIA R5 evo won four from seven stages among the 32 cars strong field of R5 cars

Matosinhos, 31 May 2019 – So far a more than promising FIA World Rally Championship debut of the new ŠKODA FABIA R5 evo: After the first leg of Rally Portugal (30/05–02/06/2019) ŠKODA works crew Jan Kopecký and co-driver Pavel Dresler (CZE/CZE) lead the WRC 2 Pro category ahead of teammates Kalle Rovanperä/Jonne Halttunen (FIN/FIN).

Rally Portugal started on Thursday (30 May) in the scenic town of Coimbra. The first day of competition on Friday (31 May) featured the return to the famous Arganil region with six stages plus the show stage on the rallycross circuit of Lousada, in total covering roughly 90 kilometres.

Right from the start of its debut on world championship level, Kalle Rovanperä and Jonne Halttunen powered the new ŠKODA FABIA R5 evo into the lead of the WRC 2 Pro category. After winning the first three stages, a puncture during the fourth test cost them more than 40 seconds and also the lead. "The puncture came out of nowhere; I didn't hit anything. The stages were much rougher than I expected, you cannot go flat out everywhere," explained Kalle Rovanperä.

While Rovanperä's teammate Jan Kopecký had a trouble-free run in the second ŠKODA FABIA R5 evo, the closest competitor of the ŠKODA works crews, Citroën driver Mads Østberg, dropped down the leader board due to technical issues. Although Kopecký, the reigning WRC 2 champion, had not driven on gravel in competition since Rally Spain last November, he did not waste time to settle in. The Czech took the lead of the WRC 2 Pro category during the second loop of the morning stages and defended this position until the day's finish.

On the tough gravel roads of Rally Portugal, the new ŠKODA FABIA R5 evo so far demonstrated speed and reliability. Rovanperä and Kopecký won four of leg one's seven stages among the R5 competitors. On Saturday, the longest leg of the rally, the ŠKODA works crews have to master eight more tough special stages totalling more than 165 kilometres.
